Create a Caring Future

Estate planning is a powerful way to create and sustain a caring future for all youth. By naming the Friends of Youth Foundation in your will, you can ensure that our shared vision—that all youth should have every opportunity to succeed—will be realized for generations to come.

How to Name the Friends of Youth Foundation in Your Will

If you are planning or revising your will, please consider the following opportunities:

- Identify a percentage of your estate for the Friends of Youth Foundation
- Give a specific dollar amount

Friends of Youth

"Life's most persistent and urgent question is,
'What are you doing for others?'" .

Renee Sajous is Fostering

For fourteen years, Renee Sajous has taken foster children into her home as a Friends of Youth foster parent. Her experience, compassion and genuine heart for kids has helped scores of children over the years. Renee tells us:

“We are not the heroes. The children are. They’re the ones who have to face the world with feelings of abandonment, low self-esteem, inadequacy, and anxiety... if they don’t give up, how can we?”

Renee’s response to life’s most urgent question is clear, and she IS a hero to us.

By supporting the Friends of Youth Foundation, you ensure that generations of children, youth and families will find the help they need at Friends of Youth. Thank you!

First Lady Inslee is Doing Outreach

Since before she became First Lady, Trudi Inslee has been a tireless supporter and advocate for children, families and youth. She is the honorary co-chair of a new initiative, A Way Home Washington, to prevent and end youth homelessness in our state.

In recognition of her leadership and commitment, we presented her with an official Friends of Youth Outreach Jacket, worn by our street outreach team as they drive throughout the Eastside, offering a welcoming hand to youth in need. We are truly inspired by her leadership for children in Washington.
